

Dr Bina D'Costa is the Convenor of the Bachelor Program in Security Analysis and a lecturer with the Faculty of Asian Studies, the Australian National University (ANU), Canberra. She was previously the post-doctoral research fellow on poverty, inequality and development in post-conflict states, at the University of Otago, Dunedin, New Zealand and the John Vincent Fellow in the Department of International Relations of the Research School of Asian and Pacific Studies at the ANU, where she earned her PhD in 2003. She has taught in the Departments of International Relations and Women's Studies at the ANU and the Australian Defence Force Academy, University of New South Wales.

Her research interests are in postconflict peacebuilding, governance, gender and conflict, gender and development and the role of civil society and social movements. She has also focused extensively on both development and security issues in South Asia.

Bina is working on historical injustices, truth and memory in relation to the strategies of civil society in demanding justice when there is a hostile government in power. This action-oriented research informs her book manuscript titled 'Burden' of the State: Gendering War Crimes and National Identity Politics in Postcolonial South Asia'.
