

Roundtable: Consumption, Law, and the Environment

On October 19-20, 2006, nineteen individuals with backgrounds in law, economics, religion, political science, philosophy, and environmental science met to discuss the intersections of consumption, law, and the environment. Participants included faculty from Vanderbilt University, Cornell University, the University of Pennsylvania, Duke University, and the University of San Diego. Roundtable discussion focused on:

- Ecological and Economic Perspectives on Consumption
- Intra- and Intergenerational Equity
- Religion and Consumption
- Consumption, Culture and Happiness
- Regulatory and Policy Options
