

Announcing

The Center for the Americas Graduate Fellowships

Beginning in 2004-05, the Center for the Americas at Vanderbilt offers a limited number of Graduate Fellowships to Vanderbilt doctoral students whose scholarly pursuits focus on the Americas and whose interests are demonstrably interdisciplinary and comparative. These highly competitive fellowships are awarded each spring to a small number of students with a distinguished academic record.

Who is eligible?

Vanderbilt doctoral students up to their fifth year of study and graduate applicants.

How does one apply?

All CFA Graduate Fellowships require nomination by the student's home department either by February 14, 2005 (for graduate applicants) or by February 28, 2005 (for students already enrolled in a Vanderbilt doctoral program). For details about different fellowship categories and the nomination process, see www.vanderbilt.edu/americas/English/programs.php

What does it mean to be a CFA Graduate Fellow?

It means becoming an active part of an exciting interdisciplinary community of scholars at Vanderbilt. This growing community consists of graduate students and faculty from different Vanderbilt University departments, programs, and schools, whose research and teaching interests make them Americanists in the broadest sense of that term. Beginning in the fall term of 2005, the CFA will offer a series of workshops for its Graduate Fellows, which will help them discover, explore, and focus their interests in hemispheric studies.

For more information about the Center for the Americas, please visit us at www.vanderbilt.edu/americas