President's message

Namaste:

The Vanderbilt Woman's Club brings together the women of Vanderbilt University; provides an opportunity for intellectual, cultural and social activities within the community and the University; supports and assists the mission of the University; and sponsors the Vanderbilt Woman's Club Stapleton/Weaver Endowed Scholarship through fundraising.

*an ancient Sanskrit greeting still in everyday use in India and especially on the trail in the Nepal Himalayas. Translated roughly, it means "I bow to the God within you," or "The Spirit within me salutes the Spirit in you" - a knowing that we are all made from the same One Divine Consciousness.**

As this year draws to a close I want to stop and thank you. You have been present, generous, and welcoming. Thank you.

Our final luncheon is on May 1st at the Richland Country Club.

Please fill out the form in this newsletter and send to Kendra Holroyd by April 25th or go online to pay by credit card.

In closing I want to say, be as kind, patient, and generous with yourself as you are with others. Be your own best friend.

Namaste,

Sheila

Happy stories:

This February I went to upstate New York to be with my daughter and her family as Wendy underwent ACL repair surgery on her left knee. There was more than two feet of snow in all directions, but the roads were fairly clear. Most nights the temperatures were in the single digits, and the day temperature highs hovered in the teens or twenties. Those temperatures were close to what you were experiencing here in Nashville as you were coated with a layer of ice and most of you were homebound.

This NE family loves the snow and spends most of their free time on the slopes skiing. (By the way, that is how Wendy injured her knee.) On Sunday Paul recommended that I try a little of the outside sports as the temperatures hovered close to freezing. He said that he would attach my boots to some snowshoes and I could walk “on the snow” and have a New York experience. I headed out behind the house down to where I thought the creek was to see how it looked covered in snow. I walked in the tracks of a snowmobile that had passed through the area earlier. It was great fun as I enjoyed the blue skies and the quiet clarity of snow everywhere.

On Monday Wendy had her surgery and all went better than anticipated. Possibly it was because she knew what to expect since she had had the same surgery on her other knee about eight years ago. I did not drive while I was up there because the roads were still precarious due to the fact that salt does not work as effectively when the temperature starts dropping below 25 degrees. So Paul did all the driving. Just before he left to pick up Hazel at school on Wednesday I decided that I wanted to take one more walk in the snow before I left the next morning. Paul very kindly set me up again with my walking gear and offered me Hazel’s ski poles as stabilizers if I needed them. He asked if I would like to take the dogs with me. I was concerned that they would run away, but he assured me that they would stay with me and return with me when I headed back. So Beau, a black and white boarder collie, and Bubbles, a red Australian Shepherd, joined me. They were so happy to get out of the yard, jumping and playing in the snow as I walked. I decide to stay on top of the snow this time because my previous tracks were covered in fresh snow.

The dogs walked in those tracks as the snow became more and more difficult to manoeuver. Bubbles, the younger dog, led the way.

Beau was right behind him as they walked with me. I decided to venture in a new direction because Wendy told me that the creek had been moved and that possibly I could see it from a different bluff. As I walked in the fresh snow each step dropped about 10 inches into the powder. The dogs were working harder because they did not have a track to walk within, but they stayed right with me and they looked like they were still happy to be out “playing.” Suddenly I fell in the snow. The dogs jumped on me and wanted to give me “kisses.” I said, “No, I am not down here to play with you,” and then I attempted to get up. My right hand went down, down, down into the snow. My left hand did the same. I could push the ski poles two feet down until they hit the frozen ground, leaving only about six inches of pole sticking out of the ground, giving me no help. How was I going to get up? I was not in distress. I was not cold. The house was still visible. I had a phone on me, but I knew that Paul had gone to get Hazel and that Wendy would be no help in her condition. I contemplated rolling back if necessary. I tried again to raise myself with my hands, but I could not get leverage. Then I noticed that Beau had positioned himself on the snow next to my body and was not moving. Could he have placed himself there to help me? I certainly was not going to do anything that could possibly injure him. Beau continued to lie there. I applied gentle pressure up and down his spine to see if he showed any discomfort or signs of pain. He remained perfectly still and calm. I did it again with a little more pressure, and still the same result. I think Beau had positioned himself to help me. I placed my left hand on his stronger upper back with my weight being distributed over several anchor points of his body in the snow. In less than two seconds I had my right foot under me. Beau stayed right there. I tested other options but came to the same conclusion that I needed Beau one more time. Again I was able to get my left foot under me and up I went. Both dogs were up at this point, and I turned around and headed back to the house. I do believe that Beau knew exactly what he was doing, and he was there to help me. I did give them both treats when we returned, but I think they never made the connection. I do believe that this was all just in a day’s work. I will Love and Bless those dogs ALWAYS.

P.S. Beau was a rescue dog that Wendy found online who lived in West Tennessee.
