Can I take my Vanderbilt-owned laptop, PDA, or other electronic device on foreign trips?

Vanderbilt-owned electronic devices, such as commercially available laptop computers, PDAs, smart phones, etc., may be taken out of the U.S. for use during university approved trips. Such temporary exports are permitted through an exception to the Export Administration Regulations. The traveler should complete a temporary export certification (TMP) prior to travel and carry a copy of the TMP certification with them on the trip. The TMP exception is not available for trips to Iran, Sudan, Syria, North Korea or Cuba.

This exception includes standard operating systems and mass market software. All other types of proprietary or export controlled technology and technical data must be removed prior to international travel and evaluated separately to determine if a license is required or if a valid exception exists for your intended destinations.
