Do export controls apply even when no publication or citizenship restrictions are associated with my research?

Yes. Only the information (results or data) generated by fundamental research is exempted from export controls. The equipment software and technology used to perform the fundamental research may be subject to export control. This is true for commercially available software and technology, as well as software or technology that may be produced during or developed to support research activities.

In addition, providing assistance to a foreign national or foreign entity regarding any technology controlled by ITAR is a defense service and requires a license.
