This survey was carried out as part of the University of Pittsburgh Central American Public Opinion Project (CAPOP). The CAPOP was conceived in 1989, and carried out between the years 1990 and 1991. It was designed to tap the opinion of Central Americans on a host of topics, being attitudes towards Central American integration the main one. As a whole, CAPOP’s funding sources include the Andrew Mellon Foundation, the Tinker Foundation, the Howard Heinz Endowment, the University of Pittsburgh Central Research Small Grant Fund, and the Instituto de Estudios Latinoamericanos (IDELA). The CAPOP collected attitudinal survey data on the opinions of over 4,000 Central Americans in the metropolitan areas of the six Spanish-speaking Republics of the region. CAPOP was a precursor of LAPOP when the countries were confined to Central America.

Anabelle Conroy coordinated this Honduran mass study. The Centro de Estudios y Promoción del Desarrollo (CEPROD) and the Centro de Documentación de Honduras (CEDOH) collaborated with this effort. Country mass samples for the six-nation study were of area probability design. In each country, the most recent population census data was used. The design called for samples of at least 500 with a maximum of 1,000 respondents from each country. The lower boundary of 500 was established so as to provide a sufficient number of cases from each country to allow for reliable statistical analysis.

In Honduras, the mass sample size selected was of 566 respondents. Although the sample is not representative of the national population, it is representative of the metropolitan areas of Tegucigalpa (53.7%) and San Pedro Sula (46.3%), the two largest cities in the country. Total number of observations was 500, 33.9% female and 66.1% male. This sample was gathered during July and August 1991. Within the household, individuals were selected for the interview using the next birthday selection system. As in virtually all LAPOP surveys, this study was conducted using face-to-face interviews in the homes of respondents. No phone interviews were used. Category labels for some variables remain undefined. An elite survey was also conducted in Honduras for this project during this period.

A view of urban attitudes toward regional integration, that includes the Honduran data, can be found in Attitudes of the Central American Mass Public toward Economic and Political Integration, authored by Mitchell A. Seligson. The Graduate School of International Studies of the University of Miami’s Institute of Iberian Studies published this report in 1992. Further analysis based on this sample can be found in the following peer-reviewed publications:

The complete questionnaire, report and other above-mentioned publications can be found at www.vanderbilt.edu/lapop/honduras.php.

© Mitchell A. Seligson