

---

Understanding Latin American Beliefs about Racial Inequality

Author(s): Edward Telles and Stanley Bailey

Source: American Journal of Sociology, Vol. 118, No. 6 (May 2013), pp. 1559-1595

Published by: The University of Chicago Press

Stable URL: <http://www.jstor.org/stable/10.1086/670268>

Accessed: 03/07/2013 14:45

---

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <http://www.jstor.org/page/info/about/policies/terms.jsp>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

The University of Chicago Press is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to American Journal of Sociology.

<http://www.jstor.org>

Understanding Latin American Beliefs about Racial Inequality<sup>1</sup>

Edward Telles
Princeton University

Stanley Bailey
University of California, Irvine

Scholars argue that Latin American ideologies of mestizaje, or racial mixing, mask ethnoracial discrimination. We examine popular explanations for indigenous or Afrodescendant disadvantage in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico, and Peru using the 2010 AmericasBarometer survey. Findings show that numerical majorities across all countries endorse structural-disadvantage explanations and reject victim-blaming stances; in seven of eight countries, they specifically recognize discrimination against ethnoracial minorities. Brazilians most point to structural causes, while Bolivians are least likely to recognize discrimination. While educational status differences tend to be sizable, dominant and minority explanations are similar. Both are comparable to African-American views and contrast with those of U.S. whites.

As a region, Latin America has a diverse racial and ethnic composition and, like the United States, a history of European colonization of indigenous peoples and the subsequent importation of millions of Africans as slaves. Of Latin America's roughly 500 million people today, indigenous peoples account for 40 million or more, and Afrodescendants are at least

<sup>1</sup> Direct correspondence to Edward Telles, Department of Sociology, Princeton University, 151 Wallace Hall, Princeton, New Jersey 08544. E-mail: etelles@princeton.edu