Health care experts for the World Health Organization did a statistical ranking of the world's health care systems. They studied 191 countries and ranked them on criteria such as the longevity of people, infant mortality rate, number of hospital beds per 1000 population, and relative per capita cost of health care. The French and the Italian universal health-care systems were ranked very highly due to high attainment scores in all the dimensions considered. The American healthcare system, however, was ranked number 37.
